(three-times amended) A method comprising displaying a representation of a portion of a hierarchy of nodes to a user, enabling a user to vary the portion of the hierarchy that is displayed by performing a first type of user-interface action not directed within the displayed representation of the portion of the hierarchy, the change in the portion of the hierarchy that is displayed being accompanied by a change in the scale at which at least some of the nodes of the portion are displayed, allowing, by a second type of user-interface action directed within the displayed representation of the portion of the hierarchy, a selection of any node in the portion of the hierarchy of nodes of which a representation is being displayed, and reporting each selection to an application to invoke node-specific behavior by the application, the node-specific behavior being other than affecting the representation of the hierarchy, and the application being other than the representation and navigation of the hierarchy.
